

It has been explained to me that the current language of the new commercial fax law going into effect on 8-25-03 is such that I won't be able to fax my own clients & prior inquirers about anything, such as an address change or contact change, or new service announcement, or even a quote, without prior written approval. That's an unfair & almost impossible rule to follow for a small 2 person business like mine. There needs to be at least some prior business relationship exemption specified in any new law so that I can send important info &/or verbally requested info to my clients & prospects via fax without getting specific written okay first. That would make no sense at all. If this has been explained to me incorrectly, please let me know.
